hey all, wanted to test the waters: there has been some conversation about turning off history for this channel (which means 24 hour message expiry); curious in case there are strong feelings either way. Also, feel free to ping me out of band if that's more comfortable.

Too much stuff happens here over the course of days that I come back to. If this goes to 24 for expiry I'd want to push some hard social rules for taking conversations to email.

I'm fairly against changing the history settings for this channel. I continually reference links and posts much farther up the chain > 24 hours after they were posted, and it would be a real shame to me, if that were not possible anymore.

That aside, I think for transparency reasons alone it would make sense to keep the current setting

Right, I didn't expect history to be kept forever. But 18 months still provides greater transparency then == 24 h

I can understand the value in moving to 24 hour expiry, so am OK with it if others are. But my personal preference would be to take the risk. Eg. I often don't get a chance to check on a thread for days at a time. Not that I've been able to be that active here lately anyway, but it would definitely make it harder for pointy haired folks like me who maybe get one day a week that isn't wall-to-wall meetings 😊

Yes. Given our distributed nature, a 24 hr expiry would mean I would miss most of what goes on here.

I suppose a 24h policy might enable more transparency, by allowing some conversations that currently happen elsewhere to instead happen here and reach a wider audience. But I think that's actually an argument for a second room.

+1 on not clamping it to 24 hours. I don't participate much, but I lurk quite a bit and at times catch up on things that have been multiple days old.

I'd prefer a longer than 24 hr window. Otherwise might just have to write an extension that archives the group 🗨️ Agree around 7 days would be good..

7 days seems like the minimum acceptable expiry. I still don't like the idea of ever voluntarily destroying records.
(Acknowledging that my side lost that argument to lawyers years ago.)

FWIW, dynamite only supports 24 hours and the admin configured default expiry (currently 18 months) which applies to the whole google.com org. Adding a new level of expiry would be a feature request.
